DOCTOR GOLDSMITH'S MEDICINE

Oliver Goldsmith, the author, who was sometimes called Dr. Goldsmith because he had studied medicine, gave away so much to the poor that he had little money left for himself.

One day a poor woman called at his house and asked him if he would come to see her husband who was sick and could take no food. When Goldsmith called he found the family in want because the man had had no work for a considerable time. He discovered, too, that there was no food in the house.

“Come and see me this evening,” said Goldsmith to the wife, “and I will let you have some medicine for your husband.”

When the woman called that evening, Goldsmith gave her a small box which was quite heavy for its size.

This is the medicine,” he exclaimed. “See that it is properly used and it will do your husband the world of good. But please do not open the box until you get home.”

“What are the directions for taking it?” asked the woman.

“You will find full directions inside the box,” he replied.

Immediately on reaching home the woman sat down beside her husband and opened the box very carefully. It was full of money, on top of which was a slip of paper bearing the words:

“To be taken as often as necessity requires.”

Once again Oliver Goldsmith had given all his ready money to help the poor.
